

COMMENT OF PRESS ON GERMANY'S REPLY

Varied Views Taken by Newspapers on Kaiser's Answer to American Demands.

New York World.

The German note in response to the American protest against submarine attacks upon merchantmen does not meet the issue. It is worse than evasive. It is insincere, even pettifogging. Regret will be felt everywhere in the United States that the affairs of a great people believed to be friendly have fallen into the hands of men capable of such desperate trifling.

Berlin does not answer the President's questions. It ignores his appeal for redress. It takes no account of the "immeasurable wrongs" against which he complains. On the contrary, having set international law and economy aside and taken refuge behind falsehood and subterfuge, it proposes delay and discussion on a point which is not open to itself the right to Black Hand our people and our goods.

New York Tribune.

Germany's answer to our Government's protest against the slaughter of its citizens, peacefully and lawfully going about their business in the high seas, will not satisfy American opinion. Courteous on the surface as Hans von Jarow's communication is, it does not strike the note which the people of this country hoped that it would strike.

Count von Rentlow and others may be permitted to storm in the distant future. But it cannot be disposed of. The murder of our citizens must stop, and it is in the firm conviction of the great mass of Americans that negotiations for a settlement of our differences with Germany are not worth continuing except upon an immediate and definite assurance that it will stop—that it has already stopped.

That question the note leaves open and tries to thrust into the distant future. But it cannot be disposed of. The murder of our citizens must stop, and it is in the firm conviction of the great mass of Americans that negotiations for a settlement of our differences with Germany are not worth continuing except upon an immediate and definite assurance that it will stop—that it has already stopped.

New York Herald.

Berlin's answer to President Wilson's note is friendly, gracious, and unsatisfactory. It is friendly in the sense that it desires to continue the relations which have always existed between Germany and the United States. It is unsatisfactory in the sense that it is a complete failure to come to the case of some "accidental" wrongs committed and its earnest offer of reparation for them. But it is unsatisfactory in its complete failure to come to the case of a Gulf of Tonkin or a Lusitania, whether by pairs or by scores.

Under our laws the Lusitania, in regular passenger traffic, could not be armed; and she was not. Under our laws the Lusitania could not carry troops; and she did not. Under our laws the Lusitania could not carry such munitions as she carried. The Berlin foreign office should have examined our laws before making such an absurd statement as is included in its answer about the carriage of explosives in bottom compartments.

President Wilson's rejoinder to Berlin, therefore, must be very quick and sharp—that the Berlin foreign office does not read our laws any better than the von Tirpitz admiralty observes the laws of God.

New York Herald.

Scarcely less thinly veiled is the insult contained in Germany's recommendation to the "attentive examination" of the United States of what it pleased to call "facts" in the Lusitania case—facts not substantiated and which cannot be substantiated, and which would have no real bearing on the issue if they were substantiated.

Germany has ignored the real issue presented by the American note of May 13. As was clearly set forth in that historic document, the attitude of the United States is not based upon any one of the series of events cited, but upon the principle involved in the method of warfare in which they were incidents. The United States stands today the champion of neutral rights and non-combatant humanity. This has been made clear by President Wilson. It will again be made clear. Germany's efforts to ignore the issue can only have the effect of bringing it to a head.

New Yorker Herald.

The request of the German government to suspend judgment until the naval status of the Lusitania is determined is not incompatible with the supposition that Germany acts in entirely good faith. The view seems to be prevalent in Germany that the Lusitania was armed. As proof of this belief we may quote an article by Captain Persius in the Berliner Tageblatt, who bases his opinion on the vessel's publication, known as The Monthly Navy List, in which, under Royal Naval Reserve Merchant Vessels, the Lusitania as well as the Mauretania are mentioned. There is a remark that both vessels are entitled to display the blue flag which was given to the Lusitania on August 23, 1907, under No. 812.

Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The German reply to the American note is, in effect, a plea of confession and avoidance. It practically ignores the whole point of the President's demand. It offers a lame and perfidious apology for "unintentional attacks" upon American ships, but ignores altogether the protest in the name of humanity against submarine warfare upon non-combatants.

Chicago Herald.

The German government's answer does not relieve it increases the tension of the situation. The American people regret the failure of the German government to meet the real issue and to realize what was the loss, moral and in American feeling toward Germany, of what President Wilson has rightly described as "injuries beyond measure resulting from practices that 'subvert neutral nations and persons to new and immeasurable risks,' and so compelling the United States to omit no word or act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of citizens and safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment."

Pittsburgh Dispatch.

What is to be gained by flaring up and insisting upon an immediate answer now, more than two or three weeks ago? It is to be said that Germany was asked to guarantee that there would be no more Lusitania slaughters. But does any one suppose that Germany is so stupid as to ignore the fact that these negotiations are pending unless it is deliberately designed to bring about war with the United States? We can act then as well as now.

Albany Knickerbocker Press.

The German reply is deliberately evasive. It is an answer which purposely does not answer. Germany evidently is playing for time. The note is a controversy over whether the Lusitania was an auxiliary cruiser or the British navy, carrying ammunition and mounting masked guns under deck. This is not a time to suggest to President Wilson what ought to be done; it is not a time to become impatient. It is a time to be restrained. There is a time for discussion of the rights of neutrals to travel the high seas unmolested by hostile ships, despite the fact that the Kaiser's representative at The Hague convention proposed and signed such a guarantee. There is simply the arrogance of a militarism which regards all peace treaties and agreements as so many "scraps of paper" when they stand in the way of immediate tactical advantages.

Baltimore American.

A government at war and with such military resources and discipline as the German government commands must either call to strict account the submarine commanders who perpetrated the acts that have made up the matter of protest by the United States, or else the Berlin government condones, palliates, and positively applauds these acts. Compensation is farcical. Professions of regret are insincere and insulting.

Germany to her senses must be taken. The United States cannot argue with any nation when the question involves the lives of American citizens brutally murdered by a government which repudiates law and humanity alike.

Philadelphia Inquirer.

To put it plainly Germany is trifling with the United States. American ships have been torpedoed. Ships carrying American passengers have been sunk. What is the equivalent of this United States in this respect? That the German government shall "take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare."

What is the answer to this requirement? There is no adequate answer. The edict carried by the note to Germany was this: "Thou shalt not." And the response is anything but satisfactory.

Boston Advertiser.

The note handed to Ambassador Gerard at Berlin, ostensibly in reply to the warning sent by President Wilson to the German government, is a deliberate and insulting insult.

Through the mixture of quibbles, evasions, and untruths, however, there runs a plain message: For the slaughter of the helpless men, women and children Germany will offer no reparation whatever. She has continued her warfare on American ships on the high seas, and refuses to promise not to continue it. And she practically denies President Wilson and the American people to take up the challenge.

If Germany insists upon continuing war against the vessels of the United States traveling upon the high seas, as upon citizens of the country traveling upon peaceful errands, then the President has no alternative. He must act and he must act at once.

Chicago Herald.

If the submarine commanders have not been summoned home, stripped of their commands and incarcerated in prisons or put to death for traitorously attacking a friendly power, then the German government has done nothing to show that it disapproves of harming the shipping of a neutral power. Its renewed admittance of carrying out the view that Germany is reckless or indifferent.

Buffalo Express.

The German answer to the note of the United States appears to be a mere standstill. The purpose to evade the issue by bringing up immaterial questions and prolonging argument over them is so palpable as to look cynical. And the President should neither lose time nor effort words in making Germany fully understand that he meant exactly what he said when he declared that the United States would not "omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens, and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment."

Providence Journal.

At first glance it seems inconceivable that the German government, in reply to President Wilson's note, should put itself on record with this mass of deliberate falsehoods and falsehoods concerning matters which have nothing whatever to do with our protest or our demands.

Falling Germany's acceptance of our demands there is nothing left but a severance of diplomatic relations. Any other attitude would make us the laughing stock of the world.

Special Exercises at Sunday School Closing

Boy Shot at Play; 10-Year-Old Held

Rifle Used in War Dance Goes Off, and Bullet Enters Lad's Head.

NEW YORK, May 31.—Albert Brittan, a jeweler, was shot in the forehead while dancing an Indian war dance with his chum, ten-year-old Cyrus Roberts, in the Roberts' home, 62 West Eighty-fourth street. Albert is in a critical condition in Knickerbocker Hospital, the bullet having either lodged in the brain or passed through it. Young Roberts was arrested.

For some time the boys played with lead soldiers in war games. Finally they switched to "Indians" and used the 22-caliber repeating rifle which the Roberts' boy's uncle sent him from Mexico some time ago. They often played with it, but it never was loaded. The police think they found a cartridge somewhere and decided to try it in the gun.

"Now I'll show you how to do a war dance," the Roberts boy said, according to Albert Brittan. "He had the gun and he waved it above his head. I started to dance, too, and we were yelling war whoops. All of a sudden I heard a big bang, and there was a flash and a lot of smoke, and Albert was lying on the floor with blood running down his face."

Cyrus ran to the stairs, where he met Mrs. Du Fourque, who had heard the shot. She summoned Dr. Theodore B. Barringer, Jr., who called Patrolman McHugh.

The doctor and policeman found the British boy lying unconscious, blood flowing from a wound in the center of his forehead. Dr. Padua, who came in the ambulance from Knickerbocker Hospital, ordered him removed there at once.

She Sat, No Jest, on Jestor, Till Police Came

NEW YORK, May 31.—John Jestor, a deafhand, was locked in the Alexander avenue police station on complaint of Miss Sutton.

The police found Miss Sutton sitting on Jestor. She told them Jestor, who has been wooing her, became angry when his plans for her love were denied. He drew a long knife.

Miss Sutton, who is large and robust, dodged the knife, and, sitting on him, was pummeling him when the police arrived.
